I guess creating Periodic Law was really all in the cards for Mr.
Mendeleev.

What do you mean, Atom?

Mendeleev used gamification to achieve his success. He put the properties of the 63 known elements at the time on different cards and kept rearranging the cards until a pattern emerged

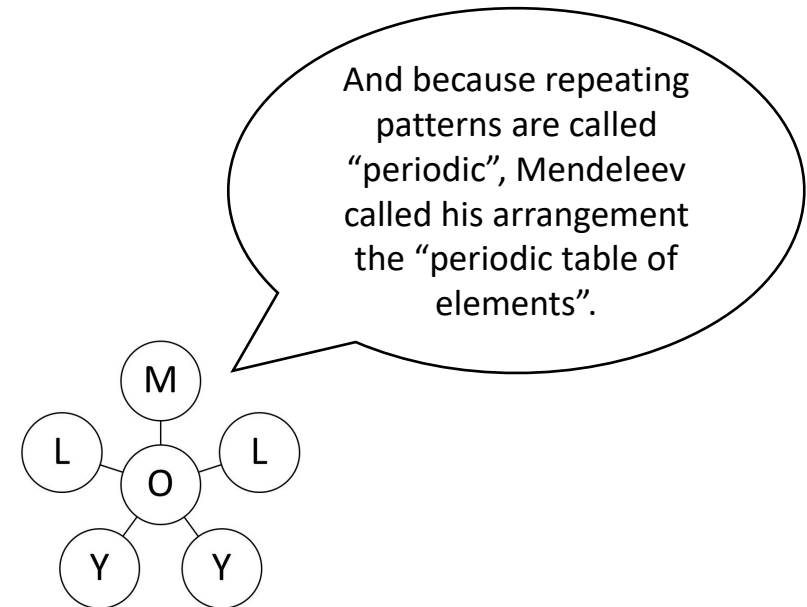

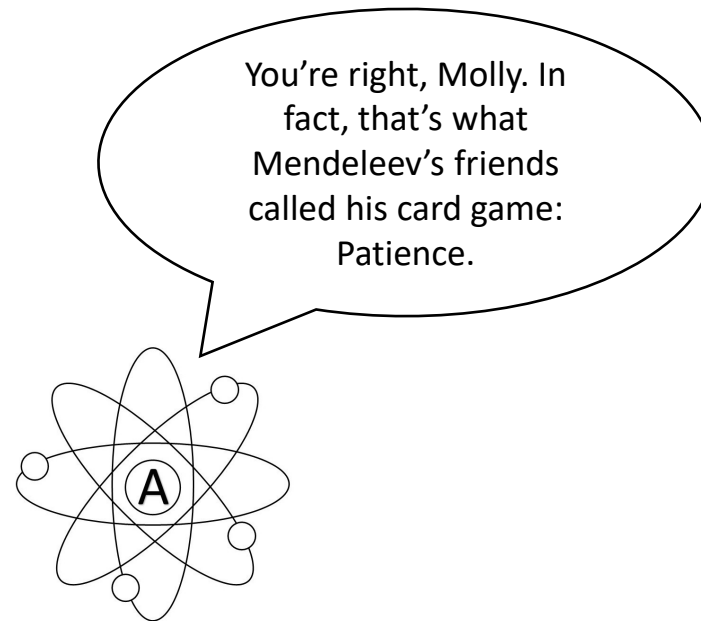

Wow! I’ll bet that took a lot of patience!

Were there pattern gaps in the cards?

Yes. Mendeleev correctly figured that those gaps were undiscovered elements.

The card patterns also helped to update what had been accepted values for existing elements.

Wow! That was quite the data exercise for the mid-1800s.

I’m just glad that someone got this organized, or else our existence might be very messy indeed.

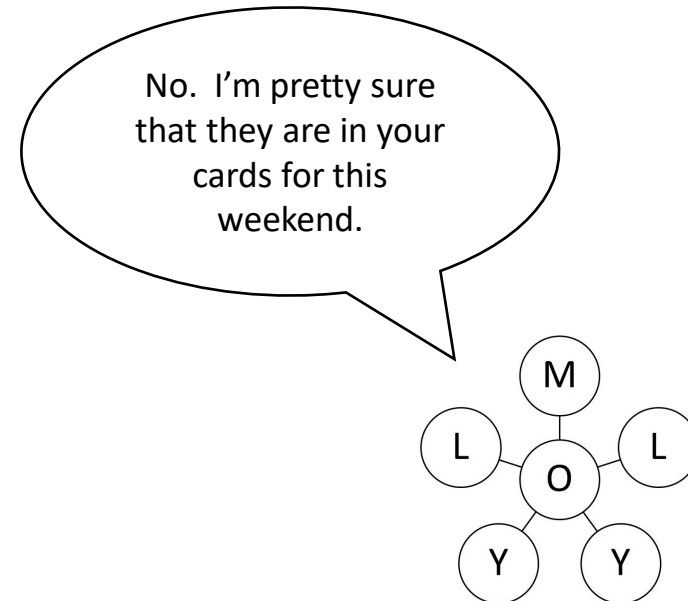

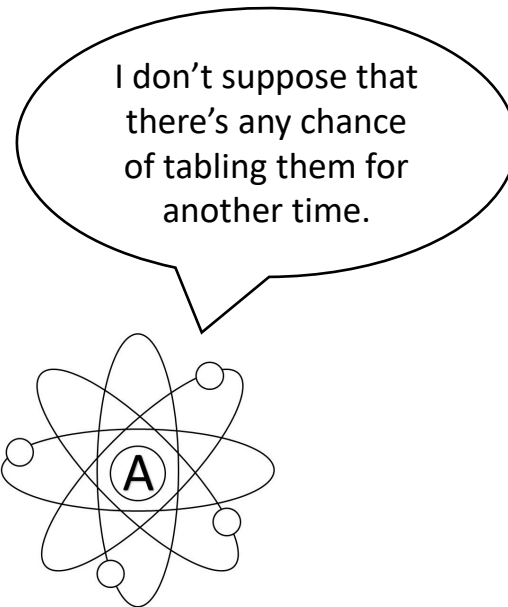

Speaking of an organized existence, there is the matter of some household chores that I’ve been patiently waiting to get started on.
